To Whom It May Concern

It's been a little more than 2 years since Alaina has been coming to Patty. Our daughter absolutely loves Patty and coming to school and would not want to miss a day. She has a sense to belonging and ownership to her school and Patty. She has grown from a shy baby who would cry when friends would come to home to a confident little girl who enjoys company and likes to play with friends and adults.

Patty is an absolute pleasure to know. She is full of warmth and compassion for children. This is so important for little children to feel happy, loved and cared in their first step outside home. She is very good at communication with parents and is organised.

She is a believer of healthy eating and inculcates these habits in children. Our daughter was a fussy eater when she started at Patty and now she eats or at least tries almost everything. Patty explains to the children what they eat and how it impacts them and interestingly they get it.

Patty takes keen interest in each child learning and development. She recognises their strengths and weakness and tries to build on those. She understands each child's likes and dislikes, teaches them the meaning of friendships, sharing and respect for everyone.

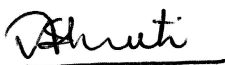

Her teaching is to a very high standard. She follows the EYFS guidelines. It's amazing how these young children sit down and enjoy the lovely circle time routine that she has developed. Our daughter knew her phonics when she was 2 and loved it. Patty provides a wide range of activities for children to learn and get involved: puzzles, writing, books, numbers, pretend play, art and craft, music and dance, outdoor play, sensory, celebrating festivals, cooking, gardening to list a few. She has a plethora of resources which she keeps updating for children. She teaches them to take responsibility and make positive choices.

She takes children to regular library visits where they get to read and choose their books. She takes children on field trips such as theatre, zoo, museums, which is absolutely amazing for the children. She supports parents and helps prepares children for transition to nursery.

We would recommend her to anyone who is looking for a warm, nurturing and stimulating learning environment and a lovely child minder.
